DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Eightrupp, located on the east side of Quaker Bottom Road, north of its intersection with Webster-Lapidum Road, is a three-part structure built into a terraced slope. The main section, dating from the late eighteenth century is a two-story stone structure, three bays wide and one bay deep. A recently constructed one-story clapboard addition connects the main section with a one-story stone kitchen which, although heavily altered is probably contemporary with the main block.

The principal (south) facade of the main section is highlighted by a two-story, wooden porch which spans the entire facade. On the first story, a central doorway is flanked by windows with 6/6 sash. The entrance is recessed with beaded board jambs and a stone sill. The door itself possesses a twelve-light window over two beveled panels. The windows are framed by molded surrounds with projecting wooden sills. Some of these frames are still pegged. An identical window/door/window configuration exists on the second story. The door is of vertical boards. Windows are 6/6 sashed with molded surrounds and projecting wooden sills. The entire second story has been whitewashed.

Due to the location of the house built into the hillside, the north facade is one story and corresponds to the second story of the south facade.

A vertical boarded door is flanked by windows with 6/6 sash. Treatment of the door frame and window surrounds is similar to those on the south facade.

The west gable is distinguished by a 6/6 sashed window at cellar level and smaller 6/6 sashed windows at attic level.

The east gable has been obscured by the one-story frame addition. A 6/6 sashed window at attic level is all that is now visible on the exterior.

An interior stone chimney is found on the east end of the slate roof. A boxed cornice with elaborate bed moldings, molded cornice returns and beaded rake boards articulate the roof area.

The central frame section possesses a three-part, multi-light sashed window on the north and south facades. Dormers also appear on both facades, an oversized gable roofed dormer on the south and a shed roofed dormer on the north. An entrance is centrally located on the east facade flanked to the south by a three-part, multi-light sashed window, and to the north by a two-part, multi-light sashed window. A similar two-part window is found at attic level.

The two-story stone kitchen section is two bays wide and one bay deep. On the first story a beaded, vertical boarded door is located in the western bay of the main (south) facade. Old strap hinges ornament the door. A small six-light, fixed-sashed window appears in the eastern bay. On the second story 6/6 sashed windows occupy the corresponding openings.

The west facade is distinguished by a 6/6 sashed window at attic level. The gable area has been clapboarded.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The following information was collected by Paul Penrod in 1976. The attached title search was also executed by him.

Eightrupp was patented by Thomas Griffith in 1665 when he crossed over from his other tract in Cecil County. The parcel he claimed measured 550 acres and fronted on the Susquehanna River from Herring Run to Lapidum Lock. At his death, the land reverted to a trustee, William Cummings.

William Lofton, a cooper, had acquired 248 acres of the lower portion of the tract by 1701 but he died in 1704. Daniel Johnson bought 68 acres from Lofton in 1701 and another 32 from Richard Perkins, the owner of the other 300 acres of Eightrupp.

Perkins, also a cooper, had purchased 150 acres of the tract from Lofton in 1703 but he (perkins) died in 1705. Perkins' 43 acres of Eightrupp were divided among his three sons: Richard getting 175 acres, William receiving 121 acres, and Elisha obtaining 127 acres.

William Perkins later began the ferry operation at what is now Lapidum. Reuben Perkins, the son of William, not only continued to operate the ferry but also purchased 10 acres from Col. Thomas White along Herring Run for a gristmill. Col. White, one of the largest landowners in the area, acquired 208 acres of Eightrupp in 1746.

Perkins operated this mill from 1760 until 1770 when it was bought by Nathaniel Giles. Perkins also sold separate acre and one-half acre lots along the river in present day Lapidum.

Samuel Gover was the owner of the portion of Eightrupp where the house is standing. The 1798 tax list shows him as owning 515 acres with a $40' \times 40'$ two-story stone house.

ITEM NUMBER '

PAGE

The east and north facades have been altered by the addition of an elaborate greenhouse.

A massive interior stone chimney rises from the east end of the slate roof.

The interior of the main house is in excellent condition. There is one large room on the first floor with a massive wall-length fireplace on the eastern end. The windows are inset and a vertical-boarded wainscoting sheaths the perimeter of the room. A circular stairway leads upstairs from the northeast corner of the room. Both the second floor and the attic are subdivided into two rooms.

The second floor features chair rails and shoe molding. Pegging on door and window frames can also be seen. A smaller fireplace is located directly above the first floor fireplace. This opening possesses a more elaborate mantelpiece. Woodwork features are also more ornate. Most probably, this was the original main floor and the first story, because of the size of its hearth it was the kitchen level. What is now the kitchen wing was probably a detached smokehouse.

Outbuildings

There are several outbuildings of note on the property. A corn crib, probably dating from the first half of the nineteenth century, is located east of the main dwelling. The majority of the support members are hand hewn and joined together by a mortised and tenon and pegging system. Wide pine board flooring is visible on the first floor and attic level. Large strap hinges are found on the principal doors. The corn crib, which now functions as a storage shed is built into a hill and consequently sits on a high fieldstone foundation.

Southeast of the corn crib is the remains of a curious network of agrarian structures. The most prominent of which is a large board and batten slate gable roofed bank barn. A shed roofed structure runs southward at right angle to the main barn along its west side. Massive fieldstone foundation walls run southward from the barn along its east side and then westward to connect with the storage shed.

Stone ruins of another outbuilding stand between the corn crib and the bank barn.

A springhouse is located about 100 yards west of the main house. It is a half stone, half frame structure with a slate shed roof. Access to the interior is along the east side.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This southern-facing structure is terraced into a slope and consists of three parts: a two-story coursed stone structure on the western end, a recently constructed onestory connecting wing of aluminum siding in the center and a one-story stone kitchen with an exposed cellar on the eastern end. The oldest portion of the house is the two-story section, which is said to date from before 1800. It measures three bays by two while the kitchen is two by one. The windows are 6 X 6 and some of the frames are still pegged. Two windows of the same type reside on either end of the main house at the attic level. The cellar windows under the kitchen are 3 X 3's. One door is located on the south side of the main house on the first floor, having an unusual twelve-pane window. There are wide board-and-batten doors opposite each other on the northern and southern facades of the second story, but due to the location of the house, the northern door is actually at ground level. There are two doors on the eastern end of the house; one centered on the addition and one on the kitchen, covered by a small greenhouse. A board-and-batten cellar door is located on the southern face of the kitchen. There is some older hardware on these doors, although they do not match the age of the house. The roofs on both stone structures are slate and gable flanked. The only dormer is on the roof of the addition, being a gabled one and facing towards the south. The box cornices and the friezes skirting the roofs of both buildings have been recently added. There are two large stone chimneys, one located on the eastern inside end of the main house and one on the eastern inside end of th kitchen. A two-story wooden, three-bay piazza is situated across the entire southerly facade of the main house. One could say that there is possibility that the original front of the house actually faced northward and that the lower southern entrance of today was at one time a cellar door.

The interior of the main house is in excellent condition. There is one large room on the first floor with a massive wall-length fireplace on the eastern end. The windows are inset and a slatted wainscotting sheaths the perimeter of the room. A circular stairway leads upstairs from the northeast corner of the room. Both the second floor and the attic are subdivided into two rooms. The second floor features chair rails and shoe molding and the pegging on the door and window frames and the old box locks can be seen. A smaller fireplace is sited on the second floor, just over the first floor fireplace. The features of the woodwork, the opposite doors and the more ornate fireplace are further clues in supporting the hypotheses that this second story was originally the first floor of the house, with the cellar serving as a kitchen and the present kitchen building being a smokehouse.

Eightrupp- Outbuildings

There are a number of interesting outbuildings on the property. A barn and a stable stand several hundred yards east of the house. The barn is a typical slat-frame structure with a gable roof and stone foundations. Just south of this is a north-south oriented stable that has stone walls and a tin roof. A smaller barn faces the south and is closer to the house. It is also of vertical frame with a stone cellar and a gable front roof. The stone ruins of another outbuilding stands just below this large shed. The springhouse is about one hundred yards west of the mainhouse. It is half stone and half frame and faces to the east. There are two doorways on the same side and the structure has a slate shed roof.
